

My boyfriend of nearly three years and I are at that age and stage where it probably makes the most sense that we live together but we haven't taken the step. Enter - global pandemic and governor issued shelter in place order. Crying on my back porch, my love, crushing my couply quarantine dreams and leaving because my roommates are also working from home and he doesn't want to quarantine with them. In truth, I can't blame him. Modern love?