Will people still make birthday wishes by blowing out candles on a cake? What has it been like for foodservice employees? It may not seem like what you are doing is historically significant, but it is. How we eat and what we eat in the future is being decided right now, by you. If it has to do with food, it's worth sharing with the Journal of the Plague Year archive created by Arizona State University. The Journal of the Plague Year archive is a real-time digital crowdsourced archival collection of the coronavirus pandemic's global impact. Please help us capture this historical event by submitting your stories and photos to the Foodways Collection. If you wish to contribute, please go to <https://covid-19archive.org/s/archive/page/Share> and tell us your story. Please include a title and description of why this experience/ photo/ moment matters to you. Hashtag your submission #FoodIsLife to connect it to the Foodways Collection. Questions? Contact me at slberry6@asu.edu. Thank you for your help in capturing history.
