

India Struggles

Should the United States give extra vaccines to India? People in India right now are getting different variants of Covid-19. Recently, India just broke the record for most cases in a day at 350,000 cases, even more than the United States. Hospitals are filled with sick people, and they are starting to run out of oxygen. I do think the United States should give extra vaccines to India. I did some research on the pros of getting the Covid-19 vaccine.

The Covid-19 vaccine helps protect you against the Covid-19 virus; however, there are some reasons why people might not want to get the vaccine. The most common complication is when getting the vaccine the injection can hurt, but after a few days the pain will go away. Even if you are vaccinated, you should still be mindful of the other people that are not vaccinated. For example, you should still wear a mask in public, and stay six feet away from other people. Most vaccines are 100% effective, but the Johnson & Johnson vaccine is only about 85% effective. Also, if someone does get Covid-19 when vaccinated their symptoms are very mild. Once you have got the vaccine you can hang out with friends and family more, but you should still wear a mask and social distance if they have not been vaccinated yet. Some children enter a clinical trial which is an optional program to study the virus. Lastly, everyone in the United States should wait for their turn to get the Covid-19 vaccine.